Firstly I'd like to say that I agree with most of the proposed changes I think that they are for the better of the community but I don't agree with two of them

The lever shotgun changing classification of those is ridiculous they no more dangerous than regular lever action rifle and they aren't even new technology they have been in production since 1901 and if they were so dangerous why weren't they classified cat c or d when the pump actions were they are not as fast as a pump action if you could fire reload and fire both barrels again of a double barrel faster than you could fire 4 out of a lever gun.. so what them more dangerous than any other shotgun on the market? You tell us

Second is the gel blasters they are toys yes some if not most are modelled on real firearms yep bring in some regulations don't totally ban them in other states it's starting to pick up as a sport like air soft in the us. I get that you don't want people carrying them in the streets that could be a regulation safe transport like an firearm in a bag or case ect and people using them for crimes should be charged as a firearms offence they intended to use it as a firearm.. most of the firearms they are modelling them from readily available in Australia make em have red barrel ends ect make people do on online safety course plenty of things you could do
